This week the United States hosted a Global Nuclear Security Summit in Washington D.C. Leaders of 47 nations participated in discussions about collaborative efforts to prevent nuclear terrorism and the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

While economic stability and fiscal order are our most important domestic policy considerations, these threats are real and pose horrific danger to our nation and to global security. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and co-founder of the Congressional Nuclear Security Caucus, nuclear security and weapons nonproliferation have been among my top priorities.

Recently, I discussed these matters in detail during an interview on KLIN's Drive Time radio program. I thought you might be interested in hearing the interview, which can be found by clicking the following link http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OjDAC_jVG1Q .
