Tired of the deadline dramas in Congress?

Well, here's some bad news.

The fiscal-cliff crisis that is gripping the nation will probably be postponed into the future, as time is running out for Congress to pass a broad-based package that addresses the nation's ballooning debt through spending cuts and tax reform, two Nebraska congressmen said Friday.

But there is some good news on the horizon.

Both Reps. Lee Terry and Jeff Fortenberry say they are optimistic an agreement will be reached by Monday — or in the very near future — that will stop taxes from dramatically rising on nearly every working American in 2013.

Click here to read more.